Father of Taylor Force to address AIPAC, Aug. 27

Stuart Force, it is safe to say, is a reader of the INTERMOUNTAIN JEWISH NEWS. When I was contacted by Sandor Kandice of Bulow Jewelers, about conducting an event at the home of Dana and Michael Werner, Stuart Force could not have been more agreeable. He was happy that it would be a loose gathering of the FIDF Aspen community, hosted the event.

The evening presented a rare and exclusive opportunity to pray tribute to Israel and its men and women in uniform. The memory is shared only by those who knew the legacy of Taylor Force. The event at the Chabad JCC. Ross Daniels was the lead sponsor.

But no. He is coming to Denver because over the last two years many people have reached out to the Force family “through our loss and through the Taylor Force Act to try to interrupt if not stop money from US taxpayers that goes to the Palestinian Authority. When a Palestinian kills an Israeli civilian, the killer is paid, or if the killer died during his terrorist attack, the killer’s family is paid.

The memory is shared only by those who knew the legacy of Taylor Force is vastly bolstered because there is a law, now, the Taylor Force Act. Passed by Congress, no less. The Taylor Force Act states that no American governmental funds shall be given to the Palestinian entity that financially rewards terrorism.

The law is named after Taylor Force for the same reason that Taylor Force is now a memory. This graduate of West Point, this soldier for the United States of America in Iraq and Afghanistan, was a Palestinian on a stabbing spree, and was murdered March 8, 2016 in Jaffa that injured 10 others.
